

Porsche 963 takes Apple Music's colors to Long Beach

16/04/2026 The two Porsche 963 prototypes fielded by the Porsche factory team will compete on the streets of Long Beach (April 18) in a striking Apple Music livery. Following victories in the endurance classics at Daytona and Sebring, both secured by Porsche Penske Motorsport, IMSA now moves from Florida to California west. At just 100 minutes in duration, the tight and technical Long Beach street race is, along with the Detroit street race, the shortest events on the IMSA calendar.

LONG BEACH, Calif. Porsche and Apple Music have maintained a close partnership since introducing Apple Music "built-in" with the Porsche Taycan beginning in 2019. With the launch of the Porsche Taycan, the German manufacturer became the first to offer native Apple Music integration. Through the Porsche Advanced Cockpit, customers enjoy access to a vast catalogue of tracks.

Porsche's factory squad heads into round three at Long Beach as the championship leader in IMSA. The iconic temporary street circuit in Southern California has proven to be a strong venue for Porsche Penske Motorsport: the Porsche 963 claimed its maiden race victory there in 2023, followed by another triumph at the Long Beach Grand Prix in 2025. The event attracts more than 200,000 spectators annually. Alongside IMSA, the IndyCar Series will also race in Long Beach this weekend, with Porsche partner Team Penske fielding three entries.

"We are extremely proud of our collaboration with Apple Music," Thomas Laudenbach, Vice President Porsche Motorsport, said. "The livery on our two Porsche 963 cars looks fantastic. After our successful Mobil 1-themed appearance at Sebring, this is another highlight as we celebrate 75 years of Porsche Motorsport. I'm very excited to see how fans respond to this design."

The 1.968-mile street circuit features eleven corners and is often considered the American counterpart to Monaco's legendary Formula 1 Grand Prix track. The Long Beach Street Course runs clockwise around the Long Beach Convention Center and includes several distinctive features: a curved start/finish straight along the Pacific shoreline, a tight right-hand hairpin at the end of the lap, and the historic "Queen Mary" ocean liner as a backdrop.

The No. 6 Porsche 963 will be driven by France's Kévin Estre and Belgium's Laurens Vanthoor. The sister car, No. 7 – victorious at both Daytona and Sebring – will be piloted by Frenchman Julien Andlauer and Brazil's Felipe Nasr.

"We're naturally in high spirits after winning the opening two rounds of the season," Urs Kuratle, Director Factory Motorsport LMDh, said. "However, Long Beach will be a tough fight. Due to our recent success, we'll be running with a significantly increased vehicle weight."

Customer teams: Factory driver Laurin Heinrich with JDC-Miller MotorSports

Following the endurance classics at Daytona and Sebring, the first sprint race of the season sees two drivers sharing each car. For Laurin Heinrich, the IMSA campaign continues after overall victories in both Florida races at the wheel of the No. 7 works entry: the German will contest upcoming IMSA rounds alongside Tijmen van der Helm (Netherlands) in the Porsche 963 fielded by customer team JDC-Miller MotorSports.

The GTD Pro class will not compete in Long Beach. Nevertheless, the fan-favorite "Roxy" Porsche 911 GT3 R from AO Racing will be on track, entering as a guest in the GTD category, as it did last year. In 2025, AO Racing's "Rexy" 911 claimed a class victory at Long Beach. This weekend, Britain's Harry King and Denmark's Mikkel Pedersen will share driving duties in the No. 177 car. Customer outfit Wright Motorsports will field another 911 GT3 R in the third round of the season following a third-place finish at Sebring. Adam Adelson and Callum Hott will share driving duties in the No. 120 911 GT3 R.

Porsche Carrera Cup North America makes Long Beach return

In addition to the 100-minute IMSA WeatherTech race, Long Beach Grand Prix attendees will watch 24

Type 992.2 Porsche 911 Cup entries run a pair of 40-minute sprint races in Round Two of Porsche Carrera Cup North America. The last visit to Long Beach for the one-make championship came in 2023. Tyler Maxson leads the championship standings after sweeping Round One at Sebring in March, while Porsche Motorsport North America Selected Driver Tom Sargent makes a guest appearance in the Long Beach races.
